With nearly a quarter century of experience as a real-estate broker, real-estate agent, residential appraiser, and property manager: Ramona Simmons serves as a lead property manager for Appalachian Property Management. Ramona believes that by forging close bonds with clients, she's able to create personalized approach and open lines of communication that allow for a deeper understanding of client goals to exceed expectations.

Ramona is a native of the coalfields of Southwestern Virginia and a lifetime resident of Russell and Tazewell County. Aside from her work in the real-estate industry, Ramona along with her husband David are both second generation farmers specializing in the beef cattle market.

Ramona holds extreme pride and passion for Southwest Virginia and works to share her professional skills with her community. She shares her expertise through volunteerism, serving on local advisory boards, and is currently a commissioner on the Cumberland Plateau Regional Housing Authority.
